Student loan requirements mean much of the flexibility of Open Learning is not possible. If you would like to qualify for full-time student loans and grants, your study period will be over 17 weeks (4 months) instead of the maximum 30 weeks.

To be eligible for full-time funding, you must complete a minimum of three 3-credit courses over the 17 week study period, for a total of 9 credits (students with a designated permanent disability are required to complete a minimum of two 3-credit courses over the 17 week study period, for a total of 6 credits)*.

It is estimated that each course will require a study commitment of 10-15 hours per course per week (for a total of 30-45 hours) over the 17 week study period.

Are you prepared to complete your courses in 17 weeks?

Yes

No

*Full-time is defined as a 60% course load (9 credits) for most provinces, except with a designated permanent disability, where a 40% course load (6 credits) is defined as full-time for most provinces.

A full-time commitment can be a challenge for students, especially those unfamiliar with studying online. It may be best to start with part-time studies until you become familiar with the new method of taking classes before committing to full-time studies.

Part-time studies require completion within a 17 week study period.

Choose your study period. We recommend choosing a study period that allows at least two months time for processing your loan application, fee deferral*, and documents.

For example, a student who would like to start their classes in February should begin the loan and grant application process at the beginning of December.

Does your chosen study period allow two months for processing your loan application, fee deferral and documents?

Yes

No

*A fee deferral allows you to register for classes before your tuition is paid (while you wait to receive your student loans/grants)

Student loans and grants take time to process, as does the fee deferral application. Any delays may cause you to be late in registering and starting your classes, which may shorten the already condensed 17 week study period further. We recommend choosing a study period that allows more time to process your loan application, fee deferral application and documents.
